We need their input on where the company should go. Reflective leadership is something relatively new to me as a formal concept, I have over the years thought about my own personal leadership skills so maybe in hindsight I was being reflective? I was reminded of situations where I had adopted a more direct approach where, on reflection, it required more collaboration; a bitter pill to swallow in many respects. For many managers and executives, becoming the kind of leader that can inspire. Secondly, leaders must model what they want to see their people. However, it's the nature of the relationships between people that become your organization's greatest competitive advantage. In Aida Alvinus Ed.
