He halted at the outskirts of the city, on a hillock that commanded the main street, and sent for the regent. Bosambo listened—it took two nights and the greater part of a day to tell the story, because the official story-teller of the Ochori had only one method of telling—and when it was finished Bosambo said to himself—"This is the people I have long sought.

IpersonallythinkthatSandersmayhavebeenalittleunjustinthispointofv saw him disappear in the crowd of soldiers who stood behind the squatting figures, and prepared for the worst. The river was in sight; the moon, rising a dull, golden ball over the trees, laced the water with silver, and then there came a scream of rage.
