I thought Smith did a good job at putting the blame on both of them, but more on David. Smith's fictionalized account of this famous couple's story. With her devout husband away fighting the king's wars for many months at a time, discontent and loneliness dog her steps--and make it frighteningly easy to succumb to King David's charm and attention. Also difficult was dealing with the animosity and jealousy that comes with marriage. Though she immediately regrets her involvement with the powerful king, the pieces are set in motion that will destroy everything she holds dear. In the past when contemplating this Bible story, I had only ever considered how the loss of their first son was such a horrible punishment for their sin; however, I'd never considered that on the other hand there was an element of mercy, for a King's son born out of adultery would have been subject to the vilest of bullying and torment and would have never had a chance to fulfill God's purpose for his life. The seeds of Solomon's destruction is seen planted by his already roving eye, and his rationalization that he wouldn't commit the sin of his father because he'd simply marry every woman he fancied. He asked her name and who the lucky man was that was married to such a beauty.
